

www.nbp.pl/publikacje.

Internalization of an enterprise’s behaviour in the context of gained incomes

Internalization of enterprises’ activities as the economic process is associating with globalization and integration. In the Poland’s case inflows of foreign direct investments to our country exceed definitely outflows of the Polish investments abroad although the latter’s rate of increments is satisfactory regardless the stage of the business cycle. Therefore, considering aggregated incomes both of the Polish residents abroad and foreign non-residents in the country one is able to verify Dunning’s hypothesis of undertaking the FDI only if its profitability is higher abroad than in the country.

Translated by Teresa Kamińska